The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 39 and 40 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Kister..

Kister teaches a method of making a probe preserving a uniform stress distribution under deflection. The tip has an outer and an inner edge. The probe is preferably mounted in a support structure having a groove. A coating of wear resistant metal e.g. Cobalt or Rhodium is electroplated or sputtered onto the end of the probe in order to give it more wear resistance. If in fact the probe card is not considered to be an electronic component within proper meaning of the language then it would have been obvious to provide that the probe or elongate element be attached to an electronic component because the purpose would be to add to the wear resistance of the component. Alternatively the use of the elongate element (with the coated wear resistant end is held to be mere design choice since Applicants provide no specific problem to be solved thereby nor provide any specific purposes therefore. It is noted that inherently there must be a shaping tool taught by Kister which does shape the probe into the shape taught by this reference.

Other pertinent prior art is as follows. Dun Lany shows a stylus made of a phosphor bronze having an iridium tip. Lenz shows a test probe assembly for
